

Year 4 Blog - Week Commencing 06.02.23: The Happy Humanist

This week in year 4 we have completed our endangered animal fact files during our writing lessons. We ensured we informed the reader of all the key information about elephants and why they are endangered animals! We have worked really hard to make sure we included lots of new features into this piece of writing, particularly coordinating and subordinating conjunctions to make complex sentences!

In science this week we have continued our learning of classification keys. We now have a very strong understanding of why classification keys are used. This week we accurately interpreted a classification key and identified the names of various butterflies.

In RE this week, we finished our learning on Humanism. This week we looked at the Humanism symbol which is called the 'Happy Humanist' this was created with the aim that it would symbolise a happy person who leads a good life. During our lesson we filled the outline of the symbol with pictures of things that make us a happy human, we made sure to also include things that we know are important to Humanists.

In PSHE this week we created posters all about cyberbullying. We thought about techniques and advice we could give people with how they should deal with cyberbullying, we also offered some advice for how to stay safe when online.
